

Advocacy Update November 28-December 2

Time for Transformative Change in Intercollegiate Athletics (November 29) — Warren Zola argues that contrary to popular belief, intercollegiate athletics is not broken. In this article he identifies three areas in which college athletics must change. These changes represent meaningful actions that will restore intercollegiate athletics' integrity. Read More

College Athletes Move Concussions Into the Courtroom (November 29)—The NCAA is being sued in a class action suit by four former collegiate athletes. The suit alleges that the NCAA has been negligent regarding awareness and treatment of brain injuries. Read More

Challenges for change in the NCAA(December 2)—It has been said that true change comes through the courts. If true, the NCAA should prepare for change as three major lawsuits seek to drastically change the status quo. The NCAA is being sued over the legality of the use of college athletes images for commercial gain; the termination of scholarships agreements after one-year; and negligence regarding brain injuries. Read More